

Well developed near-surface facets underneath the ice crust.

On southwest facing slopes in Beehive there was a layer of well developed facets under the melt freeze crust at the surface. If the weather forecast holds true, sunny skies and above freezing temperatures will destroy these. If they get buried deeply they could be a future problem. Photo: GNFAC

Advisory Region
Northern Madison
Longitude
-111.38W
Latitude
45.33N

Forecast link: GNFAC Avalanche Forecast for Thu Mar 14, 2019
Northern Madison, 2019-03-13